Addition Will Provide For Swimming Pool And A
Gymnasium Space

Board Also Contemplates Building For Relief Of East End

Great improvements in the Central high school building will be made if the plans being considered at present for the new annex, to be built in the spring, are carried out.

While action on the plans for the annex is to be taken at once, a member of the school board said Saturday afternoon.

Plans for a combination gymnasium and auditorium are to be drawn up and probably will be accepted. The idea is a new one in the construction of school buildings and has been put into use only recently.

Members of the school board made a personal inspection of a new building in Bucyrus Friday, where the two rooms have been combined, and were well pleased with the idea.

In applying it to the local building, the present stage will be lengthened to extend back over the Elliott lot in the rear of the building, and it will be used as the gymnasium. A gallery will be erected on three sides of the gymnasium, which will also be plainly visible from the auditorium.

The auditorium will be extended in length and the seats elevated so as to command a clear view of the gymnasium, instead of remaining on the level as at present.

A swimming pool will be placed in the pit now used for the gymnasium. The floor of the gymnasium will be graduated so as to give depths of water ranging from probably two and one half to seven feet.

When the new section of the building is completed, the whole structure will appear in the shape of an ell, the new part facing Seventh-st on the lot recently purchased from Edward Hunter.

None of the buildings on the Hunter lot were included in the purchase price of the lot. The buildings will be moved by Mr. Hunter. He has contracted to have the lot vacated by April 15, 1922.

Altho the building will obstruct what is now a public alley, it is expected that the driveway will be abandoned by the city. All of the property adjoining the alley, either belongs to the school lot, or can be reached from another entrance.

Vernon Redding, a Mansfield architect, is being consulted with regards to the plans for the building, and the contract for the work will be let as soon as the plans are approved.

By letting the contract early, before the rush of spring building, it is hoped that a better price may be obtained. Any savings from the $160,000 to be forthcoming from the bond issue approved at the recent election, will be applied to the construction of a small building on east Chestnut-st, on the lot purchased from John Hall.

It is planned to erect a two-story, four room building as soon as possible. The building is to be so constructed that additions to it may be easily made when desired.

The building will be placed back from the street on the higher ground where it will overlook the surrounding residences. The lot on which it will be erected is large and affords an excellent space for a play ground.

No definite action toward the construction of the small building will be taken until the addition to the high school building is completed.

SPECIAL SERVICES AT BAPTIST CHURCH

A series of special meetings begins in the First Baptist church with the services of today. The pastor, Rev. W. M. Hart, will preach morning and evening. The topic for the morning services will be "How One Man Came to Christ." "Reason for Concern" will be the evening theme. Special music will be features of both services, the junior choir and Miss Ruth Bolen singing special numbers in the morning and the senior choir in the evening.

Rev. R. W. Edmondson, pastor of the Calvary Baptist church, Akron, O., will arrive Monday to assist the pastor, preaching each evening during the week.

"Rev. Edmondson has the reputation of being a clear, convincing interpreter of the scriptures and will have messages that vitally concern every person in our city," said the Rev. Mr. Hart, Saturday.

The song service each evening will be led by a chorus choir, assisted by the pastor, and will begin at 7:30.

Revival Services

Revival meetings at the Church of Christ chapel on the corner of Fifteenth and Chestnut-sts, will begin on Sunday November 27. The meetings will be conducted by Evangelist Fogle and Mariette Ohio.

POSSIBLE ALLIANCE BETWEEN THE CHINESE AND SOVIET RUSSIA HAS ATTENTION OF DISARMAMENT MEET

SENATOR FLAYS SECRECY OF DISARM CONFAB

(By ROBERT M. LAFOLLETTE
U. S. Senator from Wisconsin)
(Written for the I. N. S.)

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—Surely the time has arrived for some one to take notice of the dangerous secrecy of the arms conference, yet no one seems to mind, despite inevitable bitter consequences. The three open sessions have been dramatic formalities.

The real business is behind closed doors and no one knows what these men are doing. If it is right to conduct this conference in secrecy, then the secrecy of the Versailles peace conference was justified.

The newspapers are printing columns of matter which is merely guess work. Reporters are not to be blamed—they publish what they can get. The official announcements and the blind interviewing of responsible representatives, the latter presented to the public anonymously at the demand of the delegates, have merely served to lead the public to expect great achievement, without any real basis in fact for such expectations insofar as anyone outside of the conference knows.

If this conference has anything good to proclaim, it does not need secrecy. If it is engaged in making international trades which would not bear the light of day, it requires darkness for the deed, but now is the time for the public spirited men to denounce secret diplomacy as the vehicle of an international peril.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—The veil of secrecy behind which the armament and far east conference is now working will not be lifted for another week at least, it was stated today by officials concerned.

It was said to be altogether unlikely that an open session of the conference would be held next week. The committee of admirals, under the chairmanship of Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., is engaged in wrestling with the technical details of the American naval program.

The Chinese and far eastern problems which are engaging the attention of the main body of the statesmen are too delicate and involved to permit of a public presentation at this time, it was stated.

Couple Murdered

GALLUP, N. M., Nov. 26. — James Blackwell, young business man and his wife were found shot to death today on the porch of their home in this city. The couple were last seen when they left a theatre last night and the double murder is shrouded with mystery.

Such An Alliance Regarded As China's Trump Card— Soviets Are Friendly To Chinese And Prized For The Step—Would Involve The Entire World

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—The possibility that China may threaten to enter into an alliance with Russia for the mutual protection of their interests in the Pacific, if the powers refuse to grant the demands which China contends are vital to her future integrity and policy, confronted the international conference today.

So far this threat hovers only in the background. It has not taken concrete form and is being reserved as the final trump card in the hands of the Chinese.

There is an unofficial agent in Peking at present representing the Moscow Soviet and the far eastern republic. This agent Mr. Yourin, by name has divided his activities along three lines:

1-To secure formal recognition of the Moscow government by China.
2-To negotiate an agreement between Russia and China.

3-To arouse Chinese sympathy for the Bolshevik movement thru the dissemination of propaganda.

Russia is the bitter foe of Japan and Britain, the countries that, the Chinese allege, have taken leadership in the effort to retain foreign domination in China.

An alliance between Russia and China would combine two vast populations into a total of about six hundred million people and cover nearly the whole Asiatic mainland.

Such a merger of interests would put both Russia and China in a powerful position to resist materially foreign encroachments, especially Japanese, in Manchuria, Mongolia and Siberia.

It would put at the disposal of China the aggressive assistance of the Bolshevik leaders and be a source of mutual strength, economic and military. Premier Brand estimated Russia could put an army of over 6,000,000 men in the field.

It is evident the Bolsheviks have realized the utility of successful propaganda in Europe. For the present they are concentrating their attention on Asia.

Russia has been aiming at a strong propaganda movement in India, Persia and Afghanistan. An alliance with China would enable the Bolsheviks to converge in India from three sides in their campaign of propaganda.

FREE SCHOOL FOR TRACTOR OWNERS OF COSHOCTON-CO

O. S. U. Specialist Coming
Early In Year For A Three Weeks' Course

ENROLLMENT MONDAY

A three weeks' course in the care and operation of the farm tractor will be provided free to Coshocton-co farmers during the month of January or February, in Coshocton, it was announced Saturday by C. H. Ross, Vocational Agriculture instructor at the Coshocton high school.

The course is offered thru Ohio State University and a specialist in this line will be provided for the course, which is one of a number to be held in Ohio during the winter. The date has not been definitely fixed for Coshocton, but enrollment is desired not later than December 1 thru Mr. Ross.

Sessions will be held in the afternoons, during which the students will be instructed in grinding valves, adjusting carburetors and numerous other duties in connection with the proper care of the farm machine. A room large enough to accommodate three tractors will be provided where all the work will be done. There will be no sessions on Saturday afternoons.

The only expense connected with the course will be the prorated expense for oil and gasoline used in the demonstrations, which, it is anticipated will amount to less than a dollar a member.

The course is open to all, but owing to the limited facilities only a limited number can be accommodated, and it is desirable that entries should be made without delay to avoid disappointment. The enrollment is open on and after November 28. Names should be sent to S. H. Ross, at the high school building or 141 north Fourteenth-st. Phone entries may be made to 260 or 1289.

There are approximately 200 tractors in the county and more will be purchased by farmers next spring. The course offers the owner the opportunity to perform all sorts of work necessary to the proper care of the tractor under the direction of an expert.

"The need has long been felt both by the manufacturers and the tractor dealers of such a course, and they feel that with a better working knowledge of this machine among the farmers it will be better able to take its place on those farms in the county where it can be profitably operated," said Mr. Ross Saturday. He points out that the course is not calculated to make mechanics of those enrolled in the short space of three weeks, but rather to give some practical aid to those farmers who are now operating tractors or who intend to in the near future.

YOUNGSTOWN MAN IS NAMED AS PROBABLE SOLDIER BONUS BOSS

COLUMBUS, Nov. 26. — Robert R. Roberts, Youngstown, is mentioned as a probable appointee by the state sinking fund commission as executive director of the Soldiers bonus.

Roberts who was a sergeant during the world war, was nominated for state commander at the last conference of the American Legion of Ohio. He withdrew, however, in favor of state commander Chas. L. Darlington, Xenia.

Roberts works for a steel company at Youngstown.

The commissioners have decided that the soldier bonus bonds will be offered at not higher than a 3 3/4 per cent interest, but have not determined upon the amount of bonds to be offered for the first installment.

THOUSANDS CREATE FUND FOR A BIRTH CONTROL CAMPAIGN

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—Three thousand dollars was subscribed here for a Motherhood Clinic for Birth Control, after thousands of persons had been turned away from the crowded Park Theatre to hear Margaret Sanger and Harold Cox, former member of Parliament, discuss the subject. The meeting was postponed from the preceding week, when it was broken up before it started by police acting on the demand of Archbishop Hayes of the Catholic church.

There were police in plenty at the Park Theatre meeting, but no interference. A dozen detectives and stenographers from police headquarters and the District Attorney's office took down the speeches.

ENGLAND'S SUBMARINE POLICY MAY BE THE ROCK UPON WHICH THE CONFERENCE WILL SPLIT

Contest Over The Control Of The Submarine Has Behind It The French And Italian Plans For Domination Of The Mediterranean By Under-Sea Boats And Britain's Fears For Her Most Vital Line Of Communications—Egypt Encouraged By French Entente With The Turks, Defies Britain—Latin Union Taking Form

BY EUGENE J. YOUNG

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—Into the supposed Pacific Conference in Washington has been thrust a European issue which has been the cause of more great wars than any other in history. It is the rivalry between the Latin nations and Great Britain for control of the Mediterranean sea. The contest has been kept under cover so far as possible, but the assembled statesmen are well aware that in it lies perils to the success of the Congress and the future peace of the world; for they are dealing with something that has possessed the highest explosive qualities in all the centuries since the Greek and Phoenician navies strove for mastery.

The specific point around which the controversy rages is the future use of the submarine. On this Britain, on the one hand, and France and Italy on the other, have locked horns. Here is how it shapes up:

(1.) France and Italy saw in the war how the submarines were able to drive the British Grand Fleet to cover, to smash the British communications and almost cut the vital line thru the Mediterranean (and with only a few submarines operating in that sea). Following the war these Latin nations have paid little attention to the great battleship, but much to the under-water boat. France, in particular, has undertaken the development of big craft, with powerful guns and a wide cruising radius. Her parliamentary committee has just determined to enter upon an even more extensive program of building such craft.

Britain's Sea Trunk Line

(2.) Britain, with the Suez Canal, Alexandria, Malta, Gibraltar, and now Constantinople, has made the Mediterranean a sea trunk line for her commerce with the East and the protection of India and the Empire. It is her main artery.

(3.) So, while showing a readiness to agree to the plan of the United States to scrap the great battleships (which strong factions in all the (Continued on Page Two)

WIRELESS MARKET REPORTS WILL BE RECEIVED BY THE FARM BUREAU HERE

"Altho I have not received definite information from Ohio State University or from the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation, Coshocton-co will receive complete daily market reports in this city by wireless telephone," County Agent G. C. Musgrove stated late Saturday night to the Tribune.

"From what I have already learned, there will be a wireless station and apparatus installed in the local farm bureau office, in the Coshocton National bank building on Fourth and Main-sts by the first of the year," the county agent added.

Plans to this end have been in the making in this state for some time. Developments are progressing with pleasing rapidity in the plan of the Ohio Division of Markets in cooperation with the Extension Department of the Agricultural College of Ohio State University and the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation, to give complete daily mail-order reports to every county in this state thru the medium of the wireless telephone.

"The Coshocton-co farmers will receive the daily market reports from the local farm bureau office twice a day, conditions permitting, by means of telephones," Mr. Musgrove remarked. "He said that the reports, as to conditions and prices, will be received from the principal market centers of the country on a loop wire in the office of the Ohio Division of Markets. These will be transmitted to the wireless telephone exchange of Ohio State University and in turn will be sent to the county agents in the different counties of the state. This will necessitate the installation of a receiving station in the offices of the county agents, a work to be done without delay thru the co-operation of the Agricultural College and the Farmers Federation.

The British Empire has been put in the lands surrounding the Mediterranean. France and Italy are in accord in the recognition of the Turkish Nationalists and the demand that Britain shall surrender Constantinople to them. The influence of the attitude on the Mohammedans is seen in the grave unrest in Palestine and the refusal of the hand-picked Egyptian delegation to agree to the terms proposed by Britain for the future government of their country. Further effects are felt throughout the entire Near East.

(6) Still further in the background is the possibility of the formation of the long sought Latin Union, whereby Spain and the American Republics may be brought into a close combination for the protection and promotion of their racial interests.

Plain Talk in Italy
If there is any doubt of the seriousness of the situation one need only note the persistency with which the British propaganda, in Washington and London, dwells on this issue. It is one thing on which the Empire has taken a decided and aggressive stand. On the other hand note how the press of France and Italy are taking the opposite point of view. In Paris we hear talk by some of the militarist organs that the Mediterranean is "our sea" and these same writers have changed the name of the English Channel to the French Channel.

From Rome we are getting even more outspoken expressions, the careful editor of the Messagero, who often reflects the views of the Government, in a recent issue had this to say: "Let us remember that the Mediterranean is still a British lake, presenting a problem more important and more delicate for us than that of the Pacific. . . . Italy, as are all of the Mediterranean nations, is at the complete mercy of England, who is able to strangle them at will. Italy, therefore, cannot consent to any limitation of the submarine unless she can obtain absolute guarantees."

And the Rome Tempo, writing in a similar strain, tells us: "It is impossible for Italy and France to accept England's superiority in the Mediterranean."

Britain's Chief Problem
However much she may be interested in the big Oriental questions which are occupying public attention at this moment, it is evident that Britain considers this Mediterranean threat as her chief immediate problem. She knows how nearly she was brought to terms in the great war by the operations of the submarines, even with the Germans under the severest handicaps. Except for the few that could make their way in and out of the narrow and shallow Belgian harbors, the Kaiser's submarines had to make their base in the vicinity of the Kiel canal. Here they had a narrow exit which was constantly choked with mines, and they had to make their way across the North Sea before they could come into action.

But France and Italy have many bases from which such craft could operate in the Mediterranean; and if Spain should join them, it would be almost impossible, in wartime, for Britain to use that sea for merchant vessels.

The peril, however, would extend to the Atlantic as well. France has a series of good harbors, with broad exits, overlooking the steamship routes to England. Should an attempt be made to blockade them she would have powerful aircraft to deal with the blockaders, besides her submarines. Use of mines to blockade these harbors would be dangerous to British shipping if any got loose.

America Helping the French
America, determinedly bent on keeping the Conference concentrated on Pacific problems and determined to avoid European politics, is doing its best to keep out of this quarrel. Yet its own naval interests have forces in this country to take sides with France, whereas in most other things we are working in close accord with the British—or rather, the British are keeping in as close accord as possible with us.

Our naval experts have long held that one of the best means for the defense of our long coast and our outlying possessions is the submarine. We also are engaged in the development of such craft of great effectiveness. Our experts at the Paris conference stood out against the British proposals at that time to abolish this weapon.

Where our delegates will now take their stand has not yet been made plain. We are of course anxious to do anything which will bring the British into line for our program; and our delegates seem inclined to agree that the submarines shall be put under restrictions, even to the extent of delimiting their use only for military purposes and not for commerce raiding.

We are, however, set against the British plan to set the tonnage for any nation at a lower figure than the 90,000 tons specified in the original Hughes program. There is a strong body of naval opinion which deems even this tonnage below our needs. As to limitation of the strength and cruising power of such craft our experts hold that with the Panama Canal and the Philippines to defend we should give assent to nothing of the sort.

Thus we are bound to put a certain amount of vote on the British demands. How much further we will be compelled to go if France and Italy take the firm stand that they are entitled to at least as much tonnage as Japan and insist on freedom to choose their own weapons remains to be seen. If the views of these two powers are rejected they are likely to refuse to enter into any naval agreement. It is also highly probable that Japan an will not back Britain in the matter of the submarine. She is not exposed to the same dangers as England and could make effective use of this arm.

What of the Latin Union?
While France and Italy so far have been playing minor roles at Washington they cannot be ignored in the settlements that are to come. If Britain and the United States, with Japan as an associate, attempt to settle the big problems their own way, it is practically certain that the Latin nations will be driven into the close union which has been the dream of many of their statesmen for years.

A strong propaganda is at work throughout all the Latin states, including South America, to convince the peoples that the Washington Conference is bent on making the English-speaking peoples the masters of the world. Failure to bring the South Americans into the conference has helped along this idea.

Spain has put herself, since the war, into a position where she might become the leader of the western Latins and there have been plenty of significant indications that France and Italy are helping along the movement for united effort. The League of Nations assembly, in the last two sessions, has been dominated by the Latin combination; and Poland owes her possession of the richest part of the Silesian coal mines to their control of the League Council.

Vatican statesmanship is co-operating closely with the foreign offices of these nations. It would not favor any Chinese settlement which put that nation under the tutelage of Protestant and heathen powers.

Acute German Situation
This whole problem gains additional acuteness from the critical situation in Germany. It is becoming evident that this country will have to default on her next reparation payments unless some miracle happens.

Such a default would bring French and British policy once more into conflict. British leaders have been pressing for some letup on Germany in order to enable her to recover and help to restore world prosperity. France, however, is as set as ever on her policy of strangling her great neighbor as a matter of safety first. She cannot assent to the idea that Germany shall be built up while she is still struggling with the war problems caused by German ruthlessness.

In the event of German default France is bound to press for further invasions of her industrial regions. If the Premier Briand will not give his assent to a policy of firmness he is apt to be overthrown. There is a strong campaign against him at home now because he has failed to get more out of the Washington conference. He is hastening back to meet the peril.

France, with Germany in her grasp, thus making herself the master of the European Continent, and with submarines and aircraft that could dispute the control of the Mediterranean and threaten the very life of England, would again become the real worry to that country which she has been for many centuries. And that problem is what is concerning Britain more today than the vague ones of the control of the Far East.

So we must watch the development of the submarine issue. The whole fate of the Washington conference may turn on it.

"BROADWAY VANITIES OF 1921"

To those skeptical folk who claim there is nothing new or meritorious on the present day vaudeville stage, we respectfully submit to demonstrate the fallibility of their statements the successful scintillating musical comedy tabloid "The Broadway Vanities of 1921."

Judging from the enthusiastic welcome which the Vanities is meeting with at every stop on its tour, this delightful entertainment promises to be a classic, and the theatregoing public seemingly knows what it wants.

Certain it is that no musical comedy tabloid has approached the vogue that the Vanities is enjoying with every type of amusement seeker. During its forthcoming local visit at the Mystic theatre this mirthful and melodious entertainment will be interpreted by a cast of twenty artists, the large chorus of Broadway beauties are expert singers and dancers.

The Broadway Vanities is staged as regards scenic investiture and costumes in keeping with the high standard that the theatre going public have come to look for in the attractions under the management of The Broadway Amusement Company.

INGRAM STICKLER FOR DETAILS IN MAKING "THE CONQUERING POWER"

Cast includes Rudolph Valentino, Alice Terry and Ralph Lewis.

Painstaking attention to the innumerable details which play so important a part in creating the proper atmosphere, marked the filming of the Rex Ingram production for Metro, "The Conquering Power," adapted from the famous Balzac story, "Eugenie Grandet," which is scheduled to begin a 3 day run at the Pastime theatre, Wednesday.

The youthful director who won world-wide fame by his wonderfully dramatic picturization of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," from the novel of Vicente Blasco Ibanez, followed out the same artistic principles in transferring the celebrated story of Balzac to the screen. That he fully succeeded was the unanimous verdict of the critics when "The Conquering Power," was given its first showing in New York.

In the screen version of "Eugenie Grandet," Mr. Ingram sought to recreate the atmosphere of Paris and of the small towns of France, as he did so successfully in his production of Ibanez's film, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." For "The Conquering Power," he obtained the assistance of Ralph Barton, the poster artist and illustrator. Together they planned scenes intended to forestall any legitimate criticism as to the truth of the French backgrounds.

Old shops and private homes yielded an assortment of furniture that corresponds exactly to the minute Balzac descriptions of the home of the Grandets—the house of smoke-discolored walls, blackened fireplaces, worn chairs and battered pewter mugs.

"I realize that many of the minute details are lost in photographing the picture," said Mr. Ingram, "but the general effect is obtained, even if the means of obtaining that effect are not noticed except by a few experts. And I have found that the genuine article carries conviction on the screen just as it does in every day life.

"I aimed to reproduce accurately the backgrounds that Balzac described and possibly no writer has furnished descriptions that could guide one more securely. In "Eugenie Grandet" every detail is pictured by the writer with such masterful precision that the only opportunity for error in transposing the written word to the screen is to ignore the original."

June Mathis adapted the story for the screen. The photography is by John F. Seitz and the technical direction by Ralph Barton and Amos Myers.

Playing The Winner

"It is a great thing," observes Orison Swett Marden, in Success, "to go thru the world radiating power; to walk among men like a conqueror, giving everybody the impression that you are a winner. It not only backs up confidence in yourself, but it also has a powerful way of establishing the confidence of others in you. Such an attitude will very quickly get you the reputation of being a winner, and everybody will want to help you. Capital will be attracted to you, positions will open up to you, opportunity will chase you."

Mr. Marden's opinion is part of an elaborate system for getting on in this world and probably in the next. But has Mr. Marden never observed the effect produced by any one who tries to toot his way thru automobile traffic or elbow his way thru a crowd, or thru life, under the impression that he is a winner? Has Mr. Marden never traveled in the New York subway? Has he never tried to cross an unguarded New York street crowded with cars driven by men who are trying to give the impression that they are winners? Has he never tried to avoid buying life insurance or books of etiquette that he couldn't afford from men who were radiating power? If the answer to these questions is yes, has he felt inclined to hunt up money, jobs, or opportunities and give the them to these all-superior creatures?

No, the truth at which Mr. Marden is driving is stated too crudely. Nobody loves people who radiate power or give the impression that they are winners. We all like people who have the ordinary human doubts about themselves. We are flattered when other people pretend to be under the impression that we, not themselves, are winners. We sometimes give our money and our time to the power radiators, but after we have bowed them out of the doorway we come back cursing. The kind of person we really like is the well-mellowed failure. That is why Rip Van Winkle and Lighting Bill Jones were phenomenal successes on the American stage.

After all, the gospel of success is being a bit overdone. At the present moment, at least, humanity probably needs good neighbors more than it does men who like to go thru the world radiating power. What with the war lords of the late German empire and a few others this generation is almost fed up on men of power. The deficit in humanity, such as it is, is chiefly in the qualities of tolerance and humanity.

An Impending Blow

WHILE the arms conference makes encouraging progress in clearing up the menacing political condition of the world a more imperative summons impends in the economic and financial field. Aside from the prolonged misery which prevails over Europe on account of debased currency and lack of credit, there comes due on Jan. 15 a reparations installment of 500,000,000 gold marks from Germany which that Government, it is said, cannot possibly pay from resources now in sight.

The statement is made by the London Times that in the event of Germany's failure to pay "the difficulties to French finance may prove insuperable, and if France follows Germany into bankruptcy the crash may well bring down the whole edifice of European credit."

In this dilemma the Times calls upon America again to shoulder the burden of the world "by devising some scheme for financing the nations now hovering on the brink of insolvency."

The United States unquestionably would have a strong motive in coming to the rescue of European credit, but there is nothing new in the summons. American financiers, manufacturers and merchants have long recognized the seriousness of the European situation and the benefit which would accrue to all the world by its alleviation, but no practical solution has been attempted. America has the resources, but they are tied up in national indebtedness, while business is being taxed to the limit at which it can survive.

Why always fall back upon America to keep the world afloat, particularly when the European Governments themselves have not exhausted ways and means of pooling their resources to establish credit and restore the value of currency? The ter Meulen plan for providing war-crushed nations with credit was adopted by the Brussels International Conference a year ago and is still being agitated among financiers, apparently without result in actual accomplishment. Sir Drummond Fraser, head of the largest bank in England outside of London and organizer of the ter Meulen plan, came to America last month to expound the scheme to the American Bankers' Association, and incidentally gave an exposition before the St. Louis Commercial Club, which passed resolutions of approval.

Frank A. Vanderlip proposes, to the same end, a "bank of the United States and Europe," to be modeled on the Federal reserve system of the United States.

With these concrete suggestions on which to base a structure that would pool the credit resources of the world and establish a basis for the stabilization of currency and the restoration of normal production and trade, and with a new crisis in world finance looming less than two months away, it would appear that a world economic conference were even more urgent in point of time than a reduction of armaments congress.

The time is not too late. The very fact of the calling of such a conference might enable Germany to avert the crisis by a short-term loan.

New York Day-By-Day

By O. O. McINTYRE

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—Will Rogers is back in town throwing his latest and most audacious wad of gum. For two years Rogers has been on the coast cavorting about the movie lots.

He is one of the very few actors unspoiled by Broadway's accolade. He is today probably one of America's highest paid performers. When he left here for the west he was making $75,000 a year.

His native wit, his quaint philosophy of life and homely homespun ways prove that even Broadway is touched by human naturalness. Rogers came originally from Arkansas and roped steers in Oklahoma and Arizona.

He is as much the cow boy now as when he rode the purple sage. The first person he looked up when he arrived in Manhattan was a dock worker who formerly worked with him for $20 a month on a ranch.

"Hello, old buzzard!" shouted Rogers.

"Hello yourself you cross-eyed coyote!" was the reply. And Rogers repeated his friend of the range to a West Street greasy-dish restaurant where he had a beef-steak and a leaping portion of fried onions. Rogers has no earthly use for sham. Many home made taffy makers left.

The world to him is a great place and all its people worth while. When he was playing in a midnight show attended by social lions, lionesses and cubs several years ago he was invited to a magnificent mansion on Park Avenue to a party.

He wore what he called his "Sunday suit" and a bright red tie and he not only shook hands with the butler but accidentally jumped when he put his foot into the luxurious softness of the drawing room carpet. He told the hostess he thought he had stepped on a rat.

Rogers never signs a contract with a theatrical manager. He says his word is his bond and when he is engaged he merely shakes hands. So far he has never broken a contract nor has a theatrical producer broken faith with him.

A recent public exploitation of my craving for home made taffy has brought me so many boxes of delightful sweets from friends that it has given me an idea. Beginning with taffy in a modest sort of way I'm going to work up to my craving for a limousine, the scabbish kind where you sit in a telephone booth chauffeur out in the rain. I didn't know there were so many home made taffy makers left.

ILLINOIS IN ACTION AGAINST THE SMALL
GANG OF POLITICIANS

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Nov. 26.—Five former treasurers of the state of Illinois were named defendants in suits of equity prepared by Attorney General Bridge today asking for an accounting of approximately $2,500,000 in interest money alleged to have been withheld from the treasury during their terms of office.

Those named are Governor Len Small, Lieut. Gov. Fred E. Sterling, State Auditor Andrew Russell, William Ryan, Jr., Edward E. Mitchell and their bondsmen.

Two suits were prepared against Auditor Russell covering his terms of office as treasurer.

Two suits against Sterling, Small and Russell were to be filed today in the Sangamon-co circuit court and those against Ryan and Mitchell in the Cook-co circuit court, where many of their bondsmen reside.

The six suits cover a period of twelve years extending from the first term of Andrew Russell in January, 1909, to the expiration of Fred E. Sterling's term in January, 1921.

Attorney General Bridge said today that the suits are results of disclosures made in the case resulting in the indictment of Gov. Small and Vernon S. Curtis last July.

The Sterling bill alleges that the amount of interest unaccounted for exceeds $1,000,000 and that Sterling carried out a plan between Governor Small and the late Senator Curtis which they used for their own personal profit. Large proportions of this money are alleged to have been invested by Curtis in notes of Armour and Co. and Swift and Co. from which approximately $2,000,000 was collected. The suit against Governor Small contains many allegations similar to those in the Sterling bills setting the amount of interest unaccounted for at approximately $1,000,000.

"BEST DRESSED WOMAN IN U. S."
WILL DANCE AGAIN FOR THE PUBLIC

Irene Castle Treman in two of her newest creations.

Dance lovers will be glad to hear that Irene Castle Treman, held by some authorities to be the best dressed woman in the United States, is about to return to vaudeville after four years' retirement. She asserts that she will wage a war against the modern wiggles, shimmes and other ungraceful dances. Mrs. Treman and her husband recently spent some time in New York, where the former chose new costumes for her intended tour and dazzled Broadway with her street wardrobe. She is shown here in two of her new creations. At the left is a brilliant Japanese kimono of jade green brocade piped with citron satin and faced with chiffon. At the right she is wearing a quaint costume of old fashioned design made of rose silk with a cream lace coat and a blue chiffon bonnet.

Too Wild and Woolly
By DOROTHY WHITCOMB.
Copyright, 1921, Western Newspaper Union

When the father of Julia Everly set his foot down as to his matrimonial plans regarding her, Mrs. Everly weakly submitted to the dictum, and Julia herself bowed her pretty head to hide the tears and said, quietly enough:

"Very well, papa."

"You see," explained Judge Every to his wife, "twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars isn't a fortune in the big cities, but here in Brandon it makes me the leading man of the place. I've got a good deal of pride, Mary, and I would like to see Julia marry some young man whose means would add to the family wealth, instead of one who would use it up."

"But young men with fortunes do not seem to be in much evidence around Brandon," suggested Mrs. Everly.

"Oh, some one will come along. Julia is young yet; plenty of time," declared the judge. "She's pretty well educated. I can give her the biggest wedding Brandon ever had, and I'm determined to see her well settled in life."

Mrs. Everly sighed softly to herself. Her husband had been a good deal of a disappointment to her, since he had been elevated from a modest income as a country lawyer to a judgeship, and the acquisition of twenty-five thousand dollars through a legacy. He had become selfish, sordid and scheming. He posed as a magnate and talked like a millionaire. The time was when he had welcomed Dale Martin, the son of his dead law partner, as a fine young man of whom anybody might be proud.

The banishment of the dearest friend she had ever known naturally affected Julia. She shed some tears and said quite resignedly: "Very well, papa."

She wrote the most comforting letter in the world to Dale, whom business had taken temporarily to the county seat.

The judge came home one afternoon from his office quite brisk and animated. A client was coming to see him. An important client, he said. He had brought a letter from another lawyer in Idaho, had an estate to settle up in the county, and had placed his affairs in the hands of the judge.

"Outside of the business standpoint," the judge told his wife, and Julia heard, "I am interested in Mr. Ralph Buxton. He is wealthy, and he is unmarried, I find."

Frontier-like and refreshing, indeed, Mr. Ralph Buxton turned out to be, when he made his appearance that evening. Julia dressed up attractively to please her father, saw a tall, rough-limbed young fellow of about twenty-five, bronzed with the desert's sun. She winced as he shook her hand. He was ingenuous, boisterous, wholehearted all at once.

He paid marked attention to Julia. At first his quite familiar ways jarred on her, but finally she noted mainly deference under his rude compliments. The judge chuckled and nudged his wife in a meaningful way, as later in the evening he saw Julia and the westerner conversing on a garden seat.

"I'm glad I've met you," said Buxton to his companion. "I wish I had a sister like you," and then he became confidential. He told the story of his hard struggle to win a fortune. He told, too, of a dark-eyed Spanish girl waiting for him back in the Rockies. Then Julia breathed more freely, understanding the big blunt fellow better, while her father was whispering with fawning self-complacency to his wife:

"THE CONQUERING POWER"

By REX INGRAM, Producer Of
"The Four Horsemen"

EVENING MAIL:—

—When "The Four Horsemen" . . . scored . . . wonder was expressed if he (Rex Ingram) could ever equal that work . . .

—His answer is found in "The Conquering Power," for in the latter film he has actually surpassed "The Four Horsemen" . . . It is not too much to say that "The Conquering Power" is a distinct contribution to the evolution of motion picture production.

"THE CONQUERING POWER"

Founded on the World Famous Story "Eugenie Grandet."

—CAST INCLUDES—

RUDOLPH VALENTINO, ALICE TERRY, And RALPH LEWIS.

—WHAT SHE WANTED—Harrington Underhill, screen critic of the New York Tribune, commented adversely upon so many picture productions shown on Broadway, that she began to receive communications by mail taking her to task for being hypercritical. The tone of the letters was, "Well, if you don't like those pictures, what do you want?"

—In her review of "The Conquering Power," she made this fact public, and the following answer:
—"What do you want?" they say, and we answer now, once for all, another "Conquering Power."

FACTS ABOUT WOOL IN CLOTHING

By E. H. LYNDE
LYNDE CLOTHING CO.

The raw material from which woolen and worsted fabrics are made comes from various kinds of sheep and goats. Among other animals furnishing wool, the alpaca, which is a species of llama, and the camel are the most important.

Wool from different breeds of sheep varies widely in quality. There are many varieties of sheep and now ones are added frequently by interbreeding. Sheep that are raised for mutton do not yield the best quality of wool.

The quality and value of the wool are very much affected by climate, food, soil, breeding and cleanliness. In cool climates the wool grows more thickly while a moist climate seems to make the fibre longer and more crimp. The sheep which is not shielded from bad weather will produce a wool whose fibre is coarse, while insufficient feeding tends to leave the wool harsh and dry. Sheep must be carefully guarded against disease as the wool from unhealthy sheep is very poor.

"Pulled wool," or wool removed from the pelts of animals slaughtered by chemicals does not spin as readily as that in the fleece, and it is consequently made into medium and low grade materials.

The clothier who is conversant with wool in all its phases and understands the possibilities of deception is the man to supply your clothing needs.

Know a Man by His Clothier.

The Moscow Soviet has already made a bid for Chinese friendship by abrogating all the Russian concessions and commitments in China and by turning back the Chinese eastern railway to China. However, the return of the railroad did China no good for Japan immediately took possession of it.

Barbers' Union local of Coshocton issued a statement Saturday explaining the cause of its boycott of the barber.

According to union barbers the beginning of the fight was caused by the refusal of a barber named Correll, employed by Lease, to pay a fine of $5, assessed by the local. An offer of two boss barbers to pay his fine if he would become reinstated. In the union was refused, it is said.

Then Lease was requested by the union to install a union barber in Correll's place. When the services of a union barber were offered, in answer to his reply that he could not locate a union man, he is said to have made the remark, "I would rather see the shop card go than to lose Correll."

His union card was then removed, and a fine of $25 placed against him. Lease then asked for a meeting with a committee from the union, barbers claim. "The meeting was arranged, and an offer to pay all his fine and to reinstate him in the union if he would 'be fair to his craft' was made, members of the union state. An agreement to accept the offer was signed by Lease, but the statement issued by the union Saturday sets forth that he refused to raise his prices to the standard observed by the union shops and the union picketing was resumed.

The statement implies that Lease need not expect protection from the union in a county so thoroughly organized as Coshocton.

Members of the union feel that Lease has been not more than half way, and by his refusal to accept the union offer, has acted in a manner deserving of the punishment which is being meted out to him.

Save the Carpet.

If you do not wish your stair carpet to wear unevenly, put padding underneath it. There are pads prepared expressly for this use, but wanting these or anything of sufficient body to protect it, use newspapers, on the stair and fold it so that they will project three or four inches beyond the stair. If thick enough they will save a great deal of wear and tear of the carpet, also deaden the sound of footsteps.
